

LINERS THAT LIVE

One of the commonest causes of loss in the nursery business is failure of lining-out stock to grow. Every liner that fails to grow increases the original cost of those that survive. Poor stands not only result in higher costs for lining-out stock but cost more to cultivate and produce less saleable stock.

It will pay you to plant Willis pot-grown liners. Sturdy pot-grown liners give best results. Their well-established root systems are ready to support the plants immediately upon transplanting, resulting in better stands in the field. In the long run, potted liners are more economical.
